Does your partner call you names? Do you feel isolated and controlled? Are you afraid to talk and text with friends? Has someone you love hurt you? You have the right to a safe and healthy relationship.

Beyond physical, emotional, and financial violence, other tactics are often used by abusers to control intimate partners in LGBTQIA relationships.

Some examples include threatening to out you to family or employers; portraying themselves as the victim to friends and support systems; and describing the violence as mutual or consensual.

We will believe you. Our advocates are available 24 hours a day, every day of the year to answer questions, make safety plans, advocate for your legal rights, and offer support during your healing journey.
