

Safety and healing in a small town.

Living in a small town means someone you've known for years is never far away. You run into each other every week at the store, the game, and church. A close-knit community means we're never alone.

Confidential. Support.

Healing. Advocacy.

But when everyone knows your name, it can be difficult to find confidential support. If you need to flee your home to stay safe, it might be hard to imagine coming to a shelter in a bigger city, or you might not have a car to make the drive.

An advocate on our staff is dedicated to supporting survivors in each of the 17 Kentucky counties we serve. We offer support groups and attend family court hearings in your community. A 40-acre rural property surrounds our emergency shelter in Fayette County. You'll have lots of room to roam, and we will help find transportation to get you there.

Whether you decide to stay in town or come to the shelter, we are here 24-hours a day to plan for safety and provide confidential support and advocacy.
